Title: From Sympathy to Empathy
By Jordan Hattar
After speaking at the Anglo American School in Moscow, Russia, this girl told me to wait a few minutes. Minutes later she arrived with a handful of bank note and coins for me to give to Syrian refugees, money that she and her friends had saved during the entire school-year.

Over the past year, the words which have resonated with me the most are from my good friend, Saria Samakie, a native of Aleppo, Syria. When I sought his opinion as to what the average person can do in regards to helping Syrian refugees and refugees in general, he responded:

“We must move from sympathy to empathy.”

This coincides with the advice that Carl Wilkens, my mentor, often alludes to-- that in order to change the world, we must first reflect and then change our thinking, beliefs, skill sets, and actions.

Instead of talking about empathy, I thought it would be best to share some examples of empathy that I’ve recently witnessed:

Alex, a six-year-old boy, wrote this letter to President Obama after seeing the devastating image of Omran, the 4-year-old boy in the back of an ambulance in Aleppo: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=F6r1kbQH8hI

As I visited schools around the world, I began to share the above video that 6-year-old Alex made. Students wanted to take action and share a similar message about refugees. Here is a video that shares what students are thinking on the issue: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Z8JBG0NqsD4

Following my visit to St. Mary’s Calne, an all girls boarding school in the United Kingdom, the girls raised $7,000 to fund a midwife and nursing program with the Syrian American Medical Society: http://www.gazetteandherald.co.uk/news/15579279.Girls_raise_money_for_refugees/
On the last visit to my hometown of Templeton, California, a rural country town of 7,000 people, Mike, a friendly middle-aged neighbor shouted as I was carrying my suitcase to the car, “The world needs you more than ever.”

I feel as though Mike is right; the world needs us to stand up for our brothers and sisters wherever they may be. As my good friend Reed Taylor, a Holocaust Resource Center board member always says, Tikkun Olam (a Jewish salute meaning, “to repair the world”).

To me, moving from sympathy to empathy can take many forms. Whether it be taking the time to learn a new word in a different language or asking someone their name and responding with a smile. Most of all, empathy for me means seeing a bit of ourselves in all people, no matter our differences.

With empathy for others, it is then that we are enabled to make a difference and as Mrs. Obama says “Lead by example, with hope.”
